In Charlotte's version, it is hard to explain the guiding light in the window of stanza 2. Reason indeed may oft complain For Nature's sad reality, And tell the suffering heart how vain Its cherished dreams must always be; And Truth may rudely trample down The flowers of Fancy newly blown. Reason indeed may oft complain For Nature's sad reality, And tell the suffering heart how vain Its cherished dreams must always be; And Truth may rudely trample down The flowers of Fancy newly blown. And behold, with tenfold increase blessing Spring adorned the beauty-burdened spray; Wind and rain and fervent heat caressing Lavished glory on its second May.
