On The Derech was my first time in the Middle East outside of Israel and the scale of this bustling city of millions was different to anything I had ever experienced. Instead of trying to rid ourselves of it, as if Moshiach has come, we must embrace our fear of losing Judaism. Since that time, Reform and Orthodox Judaism have grown in their share of congregants; Reform is now the largest denomination. Not attending shul is personal, and many quite frum women do not feel turned out. Try feeling out what you do like about Judiasim and do more of it. How to balance the reality that we no longer believe the Torah or the lifestyle it promotes is Divine and trying to maintain harmony in the lives we built up for ourselves in that very same Orthodox world. I look at others I know who have gone on my journey but have either chosen to dig deeper On The Derech their fears, or to leave altogether. I can hardly bring myself to look in her eyes, so I focus on her hands. We are part comes first, religion second. I am sure it will make you feel much better, then feeling you are just doing it for .
